DEAR COLLEAGUES!

The Organising Committee invites academic staff, researchers, PhD students, students and practitioners to take part in the 1st International Scientific and Practical Conference “The Paradigm of Science and Technology Development in the 21st Century: Humans, the State, Technology and Sustainable Development”.

Following the conference, the official proceedings (abstracts) with an ISBN and DOI will be published in open electronic access. All participants will receive certificates stating the number of academic hours (12 hours · 0.4 ECTS credits).

ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

The modern paradigm of sustainable development rests on a balance between technological breakthroughs, environmental protection, economic stability and human-centredness. The challenges of the digital age, the restructuring of global production chains, new energy solutions and the digitalisation of public institutions call for cutting-edge scientific reflection. The rapid development of engineering and information technologies must be accompanied by corresponding development of the legal system, effective public administration, accessible healthcare, modern pedagogy and the psychological resilience of the individual.

The 1st International Scientific and Practical Conference “The Paradigm of Science and Technology Development in the 21st Century: Humans, the State, Technology and Sustainable Development” is intended to unite scholars of the global community around a comprehensive vision of the future.

The main goal of the forum is to pool international intellectual resources to develop applied tools for sustainable development, support talented researchers, strengthen interdisciplinary interaction and harmonise the relationship between people, technology and the state.

The idea of the conference: to consolidate the international scientific community around strategies for sustainable progress, where every field — from fundamental physical and technical research to sociocultural and medical development — is an integral part of global progress.
